Concept Note

Background

Today, one billion people - one out of seven people on Earth – are involved in either sending or receiving international remittances. In 2022 alone, over US$647 billion in international remittances were sent by over 200 million migrants to 800 million family members back in low- and middle-income countries.

In Central Asia, remittances contribute significantly to the countries’ economy. In particular the Kyrgyz Republic, Tajikistan and Uzbekistan are heavily dependent on remittances, of which a significant part is sent from Kazakhstan and Russia. According to World Bank estimates, in 2023, migrants from the three countries sent more than US$ 24 billion in remittances back home, accounting for 20.5 per cent, 48.2 per cent and 17.8 per cent of their GDP, respectively.

For the Kyrgyz Republic, Tajikistan and Uzbekistan remittances are a major source of household income, particularly in rural areas, and is often larger than income from labour or social benefits. Indeed, thousands of families can reach “their own Sustainable Development Goals (SDGs)” with the remittances they receive: fight poverty and improve access to nutrition, health, education, as well as support savings and access to credit, accompanying them on the road of financial independence. In Kazakhstan international remittances help to reduce poverty in rural and peri-urban communities.

Most remittances received cover daily needs, with a significant amount (estimated at 25 per cent) available for savings, investment or repayment of loans. Therefore, bringing or keeping these funds into the formal financial system can dramatically increase their impact. In fact, with better financial education and a broader range of financial services to choose from, remittance recipients are empowered to make financial choices that can advance them towards financial resilience.

In light of the above, IFAD and the European Union partnered through the PRIME Central Asia programme, with the aim to maximize the developmental impact of remittances by increasing access to remittances through digital methods, promoting digital and financial inclusion, and enhancing migrant returnees’ access to income-generating activities, particularly in rural areas.

This approach involves simultaneous activity areas such as: data gathering and dissemination, advocacy to strengthen an enabling regulatory environment, enabling innovative business models for remittances sparking sustainable economic development, involving the use of advanced technologies, promotion of digital and financial inclusion and of income-generating activities linked to remittances and to returnees' capital, as well as policy engagement and advocacy to foster awareness and strengthen cooperation both at global and regional level.

By helping to maximize the impact of remittances especially for rural families and returnees, PRIME Central Asia contributes to foster economic growth opportunities in Uzbekistan.

Event description

The commencement meeting will be the occasion to present IFAD's current strategy in the country, introduce the new PRIME Central Asia programme, present and discuss current trends in the national remittances market, as well as to exchange on challenges and opportunities, and build strong partnerships for its effective implementation.

Furthermore, this meeting will be a predecessor of a national platform where the key stakeholders in the remittance market - among which the government, regulators, banks and the private sector - can regularly meet with the ambition to facilitate the dialogue among the parties, share information, challenges, opportunities and best practices, and develop a road map of potential actions for the improvement of the remittance market.

The organizer

The International Fund for Agricultural Development \(IFAD\) is a specialized agency of the United Nations and an international financial institution, with the mandate to invest in rural people to eradicate poverty in low- and middle-income countries. IFAD has extensive experience in promoting climate adaptation and resilience for smallholders, green financing in agriculture and rural youth employment. In Uzbekistan, IFAD is active since 2012 and invested over US$ 480 million in rural people.

Through the US$70 million multi-donor Financing Facility for Remittances \(FFR\), IFAD maximizes the impact of remittances on sustainable development and promotes diaspora engagement in migrants' countries of origin.

Through the financing of more than 70 projects in over 50 countries since 2006, IFAD's FFR is successfully increasing the impact of remittances by promoting innovative investments and transfer modalities; supporting financially inclusive mechanisms; enhancing competition; empowering migrants and their families through financial education and inclusion; and encouraging migrant investment and entrepreneurship for rural transformation.
